The Truth About Diet

By DR. MORRIS FISHER
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

Much of the usefulness of vegetables is destroyed by improper cooking. Some of the loss comes from dissolving the useful substances in the cooking water; others from overheating.

There are varying points of view as to how the vitamin values are best retained. The Bureau of Home Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture advocates rapid cooking of vegetables at the boiling point for as short a time as possible. This, it is believed, prevents loss of nutrient and also gives more desirable color and flavor to the vegetables.

The nutritive value of most vegetables is retained by baking in the skin or eating raw.

It has been recommended that strongly flavored vegetables, such as cabbage, cauliflower, and turnips, be cooked in a covered vessel in a large amount of boiling water, such as mild-flavored vegetables, such as spinach, green beans, and peas, be cooked without a cover in the smallest possible amount of boiling water. Mild-flavored vegetables which are green, such as carrots, corn, and celery, should be cooked, either covered, in a moderate amount of water. Water in which vegetables are cooked contains soluble constituents and may be used in making up sauces, soups and other dishes.

The vitamin A value of vegetables is not much disturbed by ordinary cooking. Vitamin B is most susceptible to heat. Vitamin C also is destroyed by cooking in the presence of oxygen, particularly when the vegetables are cooked in copper vessels.

The vitamin values also are affected by the amount of acid present at the time of cooking. Q.—Please give me a remedy for soft corns between the toes. A.—Soft corns should be kept thoroughly clean and dry. They should be dusted with some inert powder, such as boric acid powder, and the toes should be kept separated. All pressure should be removed, as friction of the parts tends to make the corns recur.

Today's Health Question Q.—Please give me a remedy for soft corns between the toes. A.—Soft corns should be kept thoroughly clean and dry. They should be dusted with some inert powder, such as boric acid powder, and the toes should be kept separated. All pressure should be removed, as friction of the parts tends to make the corns recur.

Asparagus may be served with butter sauce or with hollandaise sauce. Sometimes vegetables are prepared with cheese, the latter substance greatly reinforcing the calcium value. Cooking is especially important in relationship to very starchy vegetables, since the heat breaks up the starch.

Vegetables that contain a great deal of fiber may be made suitable for invalids and those with difficult digestion by cooking. This softens up the cellulose or fiber and makes it less irritant to a sensitive bowel.

A Book a Day

By Bruce Catton

There is something both tragic and romantic about an anthology such as "The Valiant Muse," edited by Frederick W. Ziv (Putnam, 62.50).

This book is a compilation of poems by poets killed in the World War. Rupert Brooke is here, and Alan Seeger, and Joyce Kilmer, and a great many more young Englishmen of whom you probably never heard. While much of the poetry is pretty thin stuff, it is impossible to approach it objectively.

For the table of contents, listing the poets by name, has its "Killed in Action, 1914," "Died of Wounds, 1918," or "Died in Prison Camp, 1917," after each name. It is a book of verse written on the very threshold of eternity; who could read it unmoved?

What did they write about, these young Englishmen who sensed that they were about to die? Some of them romanticized war, welcomed the challenge to their manhood—"Now God be thanked, Who matched us with this hour!"—and some were cold and bitter about it; some of them looked beyond war's violence to peace, and dreamed that a world purged by suffering would then be ready to build the beautiful city of God.

But most of them looked back fondly to their England, and tried to forget the war. They wrote of peaceful English towns, with rooks circling about church towers, with green cricket fields and misty hillsides and vine-clad cottages.

There is something unbearably poignant about their looking back to this setting from the reality of mud and pain and filth that was so soon to take their lives.

Your Children

By Olive Roberts Barton

Sometimes I am convinced that we are so busy trying to fit together the edges of the puzzle-pieces of a child's behavior, we lose sight of the picture itself.

A pair of parents were nonplussed about a small incident that seemed to me so very apparent. Perhaps, however, the success of amateur hours today may have something to do with Tommy's odd announcement in school that he could play a bugle.

Tommy is six. And just what led up to his raising his hand and saying he could blow a tune on a bugle and would bring it to school to prove it, his teacher would have to tell you.

I think it was some idea about all the children bringing their simple music-makers along some day and showing the others what tunes they knew. "Mouth-organs," perhaps, or the seven-tone flutes you pick up at the 5 and 10. Xylophones, toy pianos, ukules, zithers—why, we even had a quarter marimba here one time, made out of short ribs of beef. At any rate, these tots of six and seven were evidently asked to bring anything they had and could play "Peter, Peter" on. Or just plain "Over the Fence Is Out."

Tommy Crawls Out of Dilemma But Tommy said he had a bugle. So he had his bluff called and the teacher didn't know what to expect. Nothing was what Tommy produced next day. Nothing flat.

This is his mother's story: He came home all excited and said he was going over to Uncle Billy's house. Grandpa had once played a bugle and it was hanging on a nail in Uncle Billy's attic. The teacher had asked him to bring it.

Tommy brought it home, laid it on his bed, and that was the end of it. He made no attempt to blow it, at least not that his mother or father could hear.

Next day he went off to school without the horn. They called him back, but he gave a vague answer and proceeded on his way.

Tommy never mentioned it again. And possibly his teacher is still as puzzled as anyone.

Why did Tommy cook up this story? And why did he suddenly become so mysterious and disinterested? Was he just making up a fairy-tale to attract attention?

"It wasn't like him at all," said his mother. "I think I guessed it right, though. Don't you see? Tommy sees people play all sorts of instruments. He thinks they have to do it to own one. It was big and heavy and nothing like the tin horns he had owned. He won't confess that it was all a mistake."

Doesn't it show that they have little idea how everything, including music, has to be learned? That some magic tells people how to bake cakes and roller skate and drive cars? Did you never hear a three-year-old beg for a real bicycle, and a big one, assuring you earnestly that he can ride as well as ten-year-old Jimmy? I have. And no one was more surprised than he, when held on said bicycle, to discover that it would neither stand up nor go off itself.

Gorgeous

BEGIN HERE TODAY

TOBY IVAN, 19, is a commercial model, posing for photographs to be used in advertisements. She shares an apartment with HARRIET HOLM, also a model.

At a charity style show, Toby meets wealthy TIM JAMIESON, who shows her with attention for a time. Tim leaves town "for a few days," but the time stretches on and no word comes from him.

Harriet admits to Toby that the reason her marriage to CLYDE SABLE has been delayed is because Sable is not yet divorced from his first wife.

HILL BRANDT, long a friend of Toby's, is employed by an advertising agency. Through Hill, Toby is selected to pose for a series of advertisements for the Hillier Soap Company. Soon she becomes one of the most sought-after models in New York. She goes to dinner with Harriet and Clyde and TOM GARDNER. Clyde tries to make a date with her and Toby, disgusted, goes home.

A telephone call comes from Tim Jamieson.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXVI

Tim said, "Is that you, Gorgeous?"

She must have answered, though she wasn't aware of what she said. But she must have said something, because Tim went on easily and casually.

"How've you been doing?" "What have you been doing?" "Oh, this and that. I've been busy."

Over and over she had planned this conversation, what she should say when Tim called and how she should say it. She had even rehearsed the words. And now Tim's voice was coming to her over the wire, and everything that she had planned was forgotten.

"How did you enjoy your trip?" "My trip? Oh, you mean down to Maryland. It was so-so. Weather was bad most of the time."

"When did you get back?" "Last week."

"Last week! The strange tightness about Toby's heart increased. Tim had been home a week and this was the first time he had called her. All through the days since she had seen him, she had clung to the belief that there was some reason for his silence. There must be a reason! Well, there was. He hadn't written or telephoned because he hadn't wanted to!

Tim went on, "I meant to call you sooner, Gorgeous, but one thing and another came along. You know how it is. It's a little late, I guess, but I thought if you weren't doing anything else tonight we might step out somewhere."

He left the sentence unfinished, waiting for her to answer.

Toby fought desperately to control her voice. She prayed he might not notice the pause, but it was a moment before she could speak. Then she said, "I'm sorry, Tim. I was just leaving."

It wasn't much of an answer. After all, she had had an engagement for that evening. She could have been dancing at that very minute if she hadn't decided to leave the others and come home. And she wouldn't have Tim Jamieson thinking that, because he had neglected her, there was no one else to show her attentions!

He left the sentence unfinished, waiting for her to answer.

Toby fought desperately to control her voice. She prayed he might not notice the pause, but it was a moment before she could speak. Then she said, "I'm sorry, Tim. I was just leaving."

"Sorry," he said. "Well, I'll call again some of these days."

"Yes, do."

She went back to the davenport, huddled against the cushions. She was glad that the room was dark, except for the single light. She was glad no one else was there to know that Tim no longer cared.

When Harriet reached home Toby was in bed. She lay very still and Harriet, thinking her roommate was asleep, moved quietly so as not to wake her.

A few days later Harriet asked, "What's become of Tim Jamieson, Toby?" and Toby was able to say, naturally enough, "Oh, he's around. I had a call from him the other night."

Later the same day Toby stopped in at the Model League office. She was talking to Sally when she noticed a girl across the room. Toby went on speaking, but a moment later she turned again. Then she crossed to where the girl was sitting.

"Hello," she said. "I didn't recognize you at first."

It was Maurine Ball and it was the first time since leaving Bergman's that Toby had met any of the girls from the store.

"Hello," Maurine's manner was diffident. "I—I saw you, but I didn't know if you'd want to speak to me."

"Why, Maurine!" "Well, I didn't know—"

It was no wonder Toby had not recognized Maurine. She had changed greatly. She was thinner and the lines of her face seemed sharpened. She wore a suit and hat Toby had seen before, but now they looked shabby.

"I'm glad to see you," Toby said. "I've thought about all of you at Bergman's often. But what are you doing here?"

"I was hoping to see Mr. Blake," Toby hesitated, then said impulsively, "Toby, I want to talk to you!" She looked about the room, where half a dozen others were waiting, some in groups, some alone. "Isn't there some place," Maurine asked, "where we could go that would be quieter?"

Toby rose. "Sally," she said, "can we use the little office off the hall for a while?"

It was a room used chiefly for filing cabinets, but there was a desk there and chairs. Sally nodded and Toby led the way.

"This is better," she said, when they were seated. "What did you want to talk to me about, Maurine?"

The other girl seemed to hesitate. "I don't know just how to say it—" she began. Suddenly there was a flash of her old assurance. "I guess I might as well get it over! It's about the watch—the one that was stolen at Bergman's. I was the one who took it."

"You took it?" "I put it in your locker," she said. "I don't know why—yes, I do, too! I thought you were making a play for Howard Pharis and I was crazy about him. But I didn't know they'd fire you, Toby. Honestly, I didn't know that!"

"So that's the way it happened!" Maurine went on unhappily. "Miss Burrows knows about it. Gladys found out and told her—anyhow I think it was Gladys."

She never liked me. You could go back to the store—only I don't suppose you want to. I guess you're getting along swell, aren't you?"

"It was an awful thing to do," Maurine said remorsefully. "I guess I deserved everything that's happened since. They let me go after Gladys told about what I'd done."

"Where are you working now?" "I had a job, but it was only temporary. I haven't done any thing for about three weeks now. That's why I came to see Mr. Blake. I guess it was plenty sorry of me—thinking I might have a chance as a model—but there's no law against trying."

Toby eyed the other girl. Maurine's beauty had dimmed and shabbiness made this more apparent. No, she hadn't a chance of becoming a model, whether she talked with Ben Blake or not.

SUDDENLY Toby noticed Maurine's hands. They were lovely—long, tapering fingers, smooth and soft-looking. Toby leaned forward. "Listen, Maurine, if you want a job I'll tell you what to do. Go to the shop where I have my manicures—I'll give you the address, and I'll call to tell them you're coming. After you've had a manicure, come back and I'll see that you get to talk to Mr. Blake. He needs a hand model. I happen to know that. You'd be surprised how many girls pose for hand or throat or shoulder pictures. Lots of them earn their living that way. I've got to go now, but I'll telephone the beauty shop."

She hurried away and a few minutes later was back. "It's all right," she said. "Marie will take care of you. They're to charge it to my account, and you can pay me whenever you want to."

"Toby—to think of you doing this for me!" "Why not?"

"After the way I treated you—I!" Maurine's dark eyes were misted.

"That's all over," Toby said steadily, "and we'll both forget about it. Besides, if I hadn't left Bergman's I might never have taken up modeling. It really was a good thing for me that it happened."

They left the building, each taking different directions. Toby went to Duryea's, walking swiftly. She arrived exactly on the minute of her appointment.

"Cecile sent some dresses over," Duryea told her. "Try on the blue one, will you? I want to see what it looks like."

Toby said she would and went to the dressing room.

She opened her makeup kit, applied powder and a touch of rouge, and then slipped the blue dress over her shoulders. It was a heavenly shade, blue as July skies.

She went out to where Duryea was waiting. "Well—" she said, smiling, and turned slowly, unacquainted-fashion.

Duryea beamed. "Perfect!" he said. "It's the kind of dress I've been wanting them to send for you. Exactly right—the color, style, everything!"

He stopped abruptly, sensing rather than seeing another presence in the room.

Feminine Rule at Washington Ends

All-Male Council Installed in County-Seat Election Tuesday

In a quiet town election held here Tuesday, the women council, after guiding the civic destiny of Washington for two years, was replaced with an all-male council.

The women did not run for reelection. The first term of the women council was attended with considerable publicity from metropolitan newspapers and various news services, who, because of the novelty of the thing, devoted quite a bit of space to pictures and descriptive matter pertaining to the newly elected members.

If these articles are to be believed, Washington was the only town in the country having women solely in charge of local government. However, as they go out of office, a picture comes to the Telegraph this week of an all-woman council in a distant state newly elected. So there is still a woman council in charge of one town in the country.

Mayor Charlemus Mass Williams, who accepted the job of mayor two years ago on the condition that she be allowed to pick a woman council to serve with her, says she is more firmly convinced than ever that women have no place in public life, no matter whether mayor of a small town, or governor of a state. She is through with public office, and glad of it. So seem to be the other members of the council.

Elected in Tuesday's election were A. P. Delany, mayor; Joe A. Wilson, recorder; Lee McDonald, Lut Moses, M. C. Parsons, W. H. Etter and W. I. Stroud, aldermen. The retiring mayor picked the ticket, which was elected without opposition.

CAPT. JAMES COOK was directing the mapping and exploration of what is now New Zealand, early in October, 1769, when his cabin boy, Nicholas Young, sighted a new projection in the jagged coastline. The explorers sailed in to the bay and landed.

But Cook and his men were given an unwelcome reception by the Maoris living there. The explorers were fought back and confined to the shore, where no food or shelter could be had. In all the time they remained there, the mariners could gather only wood and water. Before he left, Cook named the spot Poverty Bay. Today the thriving town of Gisborne covers this area.

And the projection discovered by the cabin boy is called "Young Nick's Head," in his honor.

GLASGOW, Scotland.—(AP)—The world's largest one-piece machine-made carpet has been completed here for the Maharajah of Jodhpur, in evidence that the East now is coming West for its carpets.

Weighing nearly a ton, the rug is 80 feet long and 27 feet wide. It will be shipped to India in a specially made tin-lined case, hermetically sealed as a precaution against damage in transit.

Gilded in color, with a blue and green border, the mammoth fabric was woven on the widest carpet-weaving loom in the world. Each strand of yarn is composed of nine separately spun threads and each square inch contains 96 tufts or knots, making a total of 36,000,000 tufts in the whole carpet.

FOR A LITTLE BOY
By Helen Welshimer

WHAT can I give to a good little boy?
I haven't a pony or cart.
Or a hoop like a moon and a tiny golden spoon ...
None of these, child of my heart!

I DO know a very tall hill we can climb
With a perfectly wonderful view,
Where drift of tall towers is seen in the clouds,
Please, honey-child, will that do?

I'LL show you the way that the sun shadows lay
Rugs on the green fields in spring;
I know which tree is a good wishing tree,
And the spot for a new fairy ring.

I'VE learned all the tales of knights with red plumes,
I who went on crusadings and why.
I have discovered, and I'll share with you,
The reason that elfins don't die.

Outstanding among the many beautiful spring parties, was the one given on Wednesday afternoon by Mrs. James R. Henry at her home on North Elm street honoring her mother, Mrs. J. M. Ligon of Conway. The Henry home with its permanent beauty was made more artistic and attractive with the profuse use of colorful spring flowers, with pink roses predominating in the reception suite and bridges was played in the dining room. Prizes were played from twelve tables, with the favors going to Mrs. J. B. Shultz, Mrs. N. W. Denty, the honoree was presented with a dainty gift. A delicious salad course was served on small tables centered with decorated pots or different shades of hyacinths, each pot going as a cut prize for each table. The salad plates carried a dainty Easter suggestion in spun baskets of confections. Dainty Miss Sue Henry assisted in the courtesies of the afternoon by receiving the guests at the door. Mrs. Teddy Jones and Mrs. G. Frank Miles assisted in serving.

Perhaps it is the spectacle of the pitiful failure that women make when they try too hard to effect a change that has called the attention of the German men to them. To the long last day of eternity, a woman will be a woman whatever her masquerade.

We congratulate the "Das Schurze Korp" for the acknowledgement of feminine right and the freedom to curl one's hair and powder one's nose and look sideways through long eyelashes when one wishes, without being guilty of a traitorous act.

There are consequences of deep moment that may result from this changing viewpoint — consequences which may have a wide-sweeping effect on the organization of the military life under Herr Hitler's divine dictatorship. When men begin to gaze fondly on women and their pretty foibles, to smile instead of frown, the men release their own latent gentleness. Severity and harshness are smoothed away. Perhaps the men do not make such good soldiers, but they make infinitely better fathers and husbands and sweethearts.

March less often under the Linden and spend more time with their families. That will be the beginning of a better understanding between the women who have been encouraged to be mothers before they were women, and the men who have been encouraged to be soldiers before they were fathers.

The article repudiated the statement that a girl is less German because she has bobbed hair. There are German girls who have bobbed hair, and it is not feminine to cut one's hair. Now the German men are willing to say that short tresses may be completely in the manner of Lillith—and they like them.

After all, women are women and men are men, before they are Germans or English, Pennsylvanians, Dutch or the Mayflower's earliest settlers. Women will find ways of improving their beauty and follow them, and sooner or later men—even the black-shirted Storm Troops who form a bodyguard when a dictator makes a speech or goes to lunch—will come to like them.

HOPE PRESCOTT NASHVILLE

Cleveland to See Twin G. O. P. Fight

To Witness Attack on Democrats Both Nationally and in Ohio

CLEVELAND—(AP)—Public Hall, in recent years the setting for colorful pageants, noisy circuses and the splendor of grand opera, will echo beginning June 23 with what may be the most interesting Republican political show in many years.

The Republican party, in choosing Cleveland for the nomination of its 1936 presidential candidate, selected a city and state where political contests are bitterly fought and widely appreciated.

The hall itself has political background. Calvin Coolidge was nominated there in 1924 amid cries of "Keep cool with Coolidge." The economy platform which Coolidge took in to the White House was approved there.

Expectations of national G. O. P. leaders who hope the convention will generate power for a sweeping concerted drive against the "new deal," are matched by those of Ohio Republican leaders. They expect the convention to provide the stimulus for a successful attack on the Democratic regime in Ohio government.

Expect "Fighting" Meeting

A spirited, boisterous gathering naturally is expected. Lafayette B. Gleason, temporary secretary of the Republican national convention, expects the convention will be a "fighting one for the first time since 1912."

The 1924 convention was a moderately quiet affair. Coolidge was

Where Tornado Fury Struck—Tupelo Scene of Appalling Devastation

A picture of awful desolation was this quiet residential section of Tupelo, Miss., which suffered the brunt of the fury of the tornado that hewed a path of ruin and death through the city of 7500 and passed on across the south to kill more than 400 people. This airview shows houses unroofed and wrecked, trees uprooted and pile din tangled heaps, and huge timbers scattered like straws in streets and on residential lots. More than 150 died in Tupelo and property damage was estimated at $5,000,000.

nominated on the first ballot, 1065 to 44.

Republicans who attended that convention will find changes when they come to Cleveland this year. Arriving by train they will find a new Union Station. There are more hotel accommodations. If they arrive by plane, they will see a larger airport.

The hall itself has been enlarged so that it will now seat 14,000 persons. The lack of smaller halls where delegates might hold private conferences has been corrected. There are now 15 such rooms.

The main arena, 120 feet wide and 208 feet long, affords an unobstructed view from any part of the hall. A glass ceiling, 110 feet high, conceals the lighting system.

Ohio's Political History

In 1828, one of the crucial battles in the pre-convention campaign was fought in Ohio with Col. Carmi A. Thompson of Cleveland aligned with the then secretary of commerce, Herbert Hoover, again a "favorite son," Senator Frank B. Willis. In the background, directing the primary and pre-convention campaign was another Ohioan, Walter F. Brown of Toledo, who became postmaster general.

Former Senator Simon D. Fess, another Ohioan and former national Republican chairman, co-operated with Thompson and Brown in obtaining the 1924 convention for Cleveland.

Five major party conventions have been held in Ohio. The Democratic convention of 1856 was held in Cincinnati as were the Republican conventions of 1876 and the Democratic convention of 1880. The Liberal Republican convention of 1872 was held in Columbus. The last was the 1924 convention here.

Six Ohioans have been elected to the presidency. William H. Harrison, Rutherford B. Hayes, James A. Garfield, William McKinley, William Howard Taft and Warren G. Harding.

Three Ohio nominees were defeated: Harrison in 1836; Taft, in 1912, when a split occurred in the Republican party; and James M. Cox, in 1920, when as Democratic nominee he was defeated by a fellow Ohioan, Harding.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON

By Rodney Dutcher

WASHINGTON.—Every so often the nation has to have a new chief justice of the U. S. Supreme Court. The next one, many insiders believe, will be Justice Harlan Fiske Stone.

Stone is the youngest and most vigorous member of the court's liberal bloc. His personality and his forceful dissenting opinions have made him a candidate for the mantle of the beloved late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Holmes never became chief justice, but Stone is only 63 and some of those who have Roosevelt's confidence are sure the president will elevate him to that post if he ever gets the chance.

Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes is 74, beyond the retirement age and not very happy. Justice Louis D. Brandeis, although in spiritual kinship with the New Deal, is 79 and hardly likely to succeed Hughes if it falls to Roosevelt to choose a successor.

His Tireless Worker

Outstanding among Stone's distinctions:

His sheer physical strength and energy match those of Justice Owen J. Roberts on the conservative side. He is willing to take on the work of writing the most important dissents and to lead in the hot infighting at court conferences which precede decisions.

Stone is not in sympathy with much of the New Deal. Appointed by Coolidge and a close personal friend of Herbert Hoover, he is a Republican. But he is a fighting champion for a liberal interpretation of the Constitution and the rights of Congress to legislate as against opinions influenced by "personal, political, or economic bias."

If Hoover were to be re-elected, Stone undoubtedly would return to his old place in the Hoover "medicine ball cabinet."

For a supreme court justice, Stone's background is unusually diversified. He started out as a teacher of law and got into the habit of judging without the service in corporation law to which most justices have been largely confined.

He left his post as dean of Columbia University law school to join the big firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, where he had a chance to learn the tricks of Wall Street. Finally he served as attorney general in the cabinet.

Personally, Stone probably is the court's most popular member. He "gets around" more than any other justice and has a strong sense of humor.

Hush on Air Crash Probe

A legend is still floating around to the effect that the crash of an American Airlines plane in Arkansas, which killed 17 persons, resulted when a dope fiend, who had taken out heavy insurance just before the flight, suddenly murdered the pilot.

Although this fantastic version wasn't mentioned in the Bureau of Air Commerce's report, which officially declared the tragedy a mystery, the report conspicuously omitted mention of certain evidence which aided the build-up of the theory, and orders have been issued requiring that pilot compartments be locked and passengers barred therefrom.

Several phials of morphine were found in the wreckage. A hole which some thought probably had been made by a bullet fired inside the plane was also discovered in a piece of metal. The wreckage also turned up an unidentified revolver. Then there was the aforementioned rumor

To Tell American Story of Clothes

Gowns Are Re-Created From the Earliest Colonial Days

NEW YORK.—(AP)—The gowns that great-great-grandmother wore are being recreated here with their natural settings in a series of portraits designed as a guide for posterity.

American clothes from the days of the Pilgrim fathers to the Civil war era, together with a pictorial survey of colonial furniture, hooked rugs, patchwork quilts, pewter plates and other features of American decorative art, are the subject of a works progress administration study.

The survey, by the Index of American Design, is one of the largest undertakings of a project intended to give work to unemployed artists.

Black and White Drawings

When finished the exhibit will consist of black and white and color drawings, supplemented by photographs of colonial furniture, intended as a reference source for artists, students and designers.

The index is nation-wide in scope, although much of the work is being carried on in New York where numerous works of art and artists are concentrated.

Artists are reproducing in minute detail hoop skirts, demure white-colored pilgrim dresses, silken ball gowns and riding costumes.

To Supply Patterns

The reproduction of each costume includes a colored fashion plate, a small scale chart of the pattern for making it and drawings of the accompanying hat, gloves, shoes and any other accessories.

The costume division of the project recently staged an exhibition of costumes of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries at a department store here. Exhibits included a brocade dressing gown worn by Mayor John Cruger of New York, 1755-1765; a lavender infanta ball gown worn by Mrs. James Colles at the Prince of Wales' ball in 1880, wedding gowns, riding habits and Quaker frocks.

Trace Payment in Impeachment Trial

Part of Receivership Fee Allowed by U. S. Judge Came Back to Him

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Evidence that part of the $500 paid to Federal Judge Halsted L. Ritter of Florida by A. L. Rankin, a former law partner, came off of a $15,000 receivership fee allowed Wednesday at the senate impeachment trial of Ritter. The house prosecution charges that Ritter "corruptly and unlawfully" received the $4,500.

Rankin, 38, West Palm Beach lawyer, contended the payment was in discharge of an oral agreement with Ritter at the time they dissolved their law partnership—that he was to pay $5,000 for the jurist's interest in the firm when he was able to do so.

Replying to questions of senators, Rankin said the first cash payment of $5,000 to Ritter came out of a $25,000 advance on his $15,000 fee in the Whitehall hotel receivership and was made the same day the advance was allowed—December 24, 1929.

He said he had "so many obligations" at the time he had no other funds with which to make the $2,500 payment.

Later he said the firm of Ritter & Rankin "kept no books," and when defense lawyers tried to put in the record an auditor's statement on the financial standing of the firm at the time it was dissolved, the prosecution prevented it. The auditor will be called as a witness.

"Did Ritter know the money you gave him came from fees in the Whitehall case?" asked Senator Adams, (Dem., Cal.).

"I'm sure he knew it," Rankin replied.

"Were you able to pay Ritter independently of the fees you got in the case?"

"Not at the time."

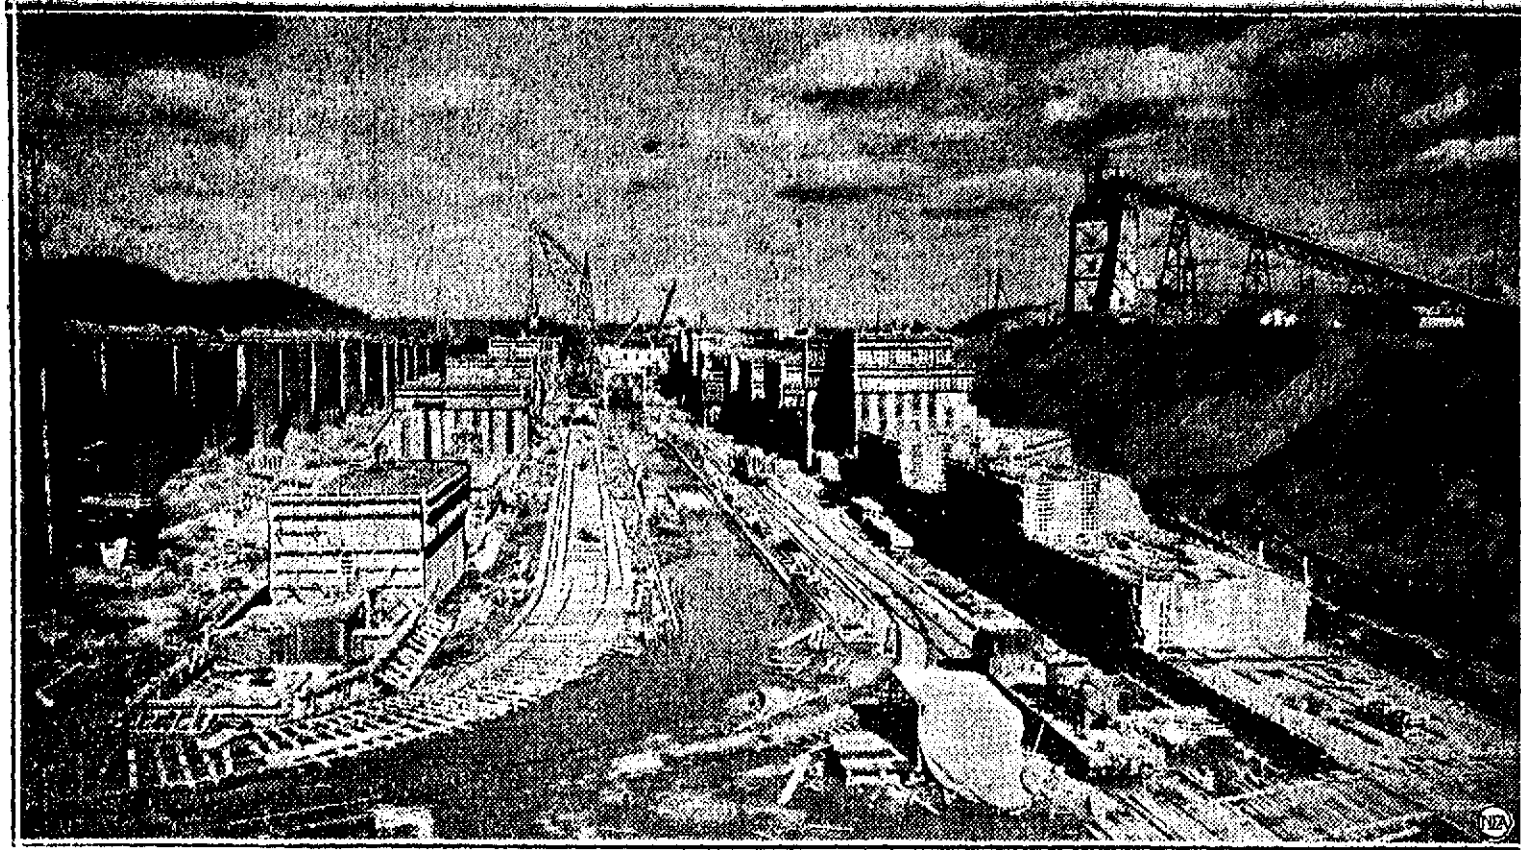

Mrs. Caraway Takes Part
Senator Wagner (Dem., N. Y.) developed that the law firm kept no books. Rankin said he made his tax returns from his checkbook stubs. This prompted Senator Hattie W. Caraway (Dem., Ark.) to ask:

"If you kept no books for income taxes and filed your return from your checkbooks, why did you pay Ritter in cash?"

"I've already stated why," Rankin replied, but repeated:

"It was because of our former relationship, being partners in the law business. This money I was paying was coming out of funds allowed in his court. I thought it might subject myself and the judge to criticism from those who didn't understand the transaction."

Huge Navigation Lock of $26,700,000 TVA A Pickwick Dam Rapidly Taking Shape

Protected from Tennessee river waters by the cofferdam shown at left, Pickwick Dam's single lift navigation lock, belittled the highest on United States inland rivers, is shown rising above, revealing progress on the $26,700,000 TVA project in southwestern Tennessee. When the 130-foot, mile and a half-long dam is completed, within the next year or so, it will make available a seven-foot navigation channel for 358 miles from Paducah, Ky., to Guntersville, Ala., and ships will be lifted a height of 61 feet by this lock. Under way near the junction of the Mississippi, Tennessee, and Alabama state lines, and the famed Shiloh battlefield, the Pickwick Dam will consist of two great earthen sections abutting the banks, and a central concrete section, 2023 feet long. The third dam built by TVA in its program for navigation, flood control, and power production, the Pickwick Dam will back up a lake 53 miles long, to Muscle Shoals, Ala.

case the sales tax could not have been enacted.

"The first draft of Amendment No. 19 prohibited the levy of any new taxes without a vote of the people. This provision was omitted for fear that it might defeat the amendment."

"Mr. Nyberg of Helena with other citizens, is sponsoring the initiation of a constitutional amendment to prohibit the levying of any new taxes that were not in existence on January 1, 1935. This will not interfere with the present sales tax which expires by its own time July 1, 1937, but the proposal will forbid another sales tax without approval of the people. With the adoption of this proposal the legislature will be without power to impose any new taxes."

"I am thoroughly convinced that full protection of the taxpayers of this state calls for the adoption of the amendment being sponsored by Mr. Nyberg. I expect to do what I can to secure its adoption. It costs money to initiate any amendment. I am calling upon taxpayers in the different sections of the state to volunteer for the purpose of circulating the petition, so that we can get this proposal before the people for adoption at the next November election. I know nothing more important to be done than to secure the adoption of this proposed amendment."

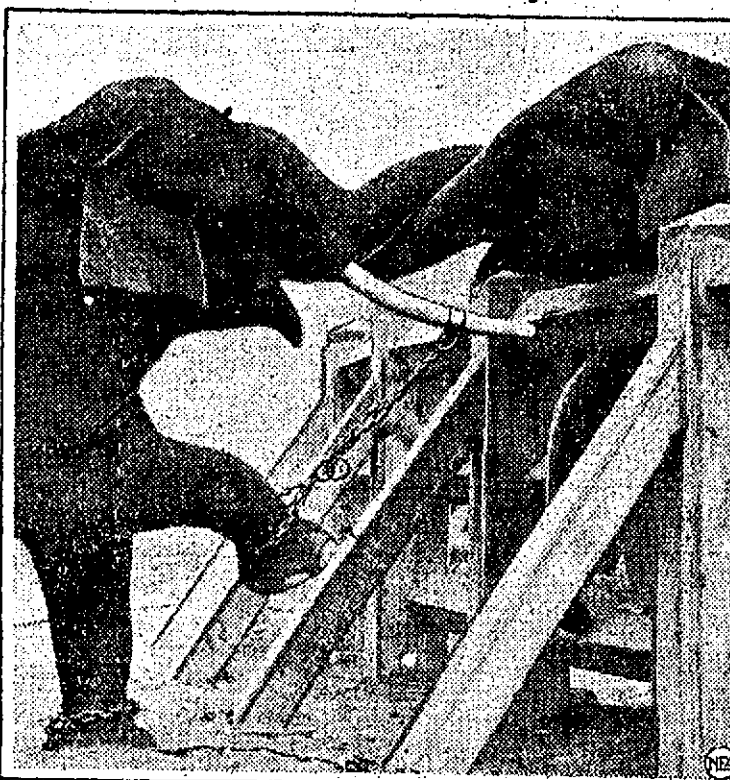

"These of you who are willing to give some of your time to circulating the petition, write me, giving me your address, so that paper petitions may be mailed to you for circulation."

Chain Store Bill May Be Enacted

Manufacturers Lean to Borah's Rather Than Robinson's Bill

By HERBERT PLUMMER
Associated Press Correspondent

WASHINGTON—Supporters of legislation aimed at chain store practices are more optimistic that some such measure will be enacted.

Talk among administration leaders for a speedy adjournment of congress—probably by May 1—made it highly probable such legislation would be caught in the jam of the closing days of the session.

That is still possible, but the chances are regarded as a bit better than even that some sort of bill can be pushed through. Few believe now that the May 1 adjournment is possible.

Opinion is divided as to the type of chain store legislation which ultimately will be approved. The best guess, however, seems to be that it will not be so drastic as first expected.

Sentiment Changing

In the house, the Robinson-Patman bill empowering the federal trade commission to regulate competitive practices in the retail trade field has been reported favorably. In the senate, however, a measure sponsored by Borah of Idaho and Van Nuys of Indiana, much narrower in scope, is under consideration.

Sentiment in congress is reported to be swinging more and more to the latter bill.

The Borah-Van Nuys bill, not so strongly opposed by manufacturers and chain store groups as the Robinson-Patman measure, would make it unlawful "for any person engaged in commerce to discriminate in price or terms of sale between purchasers of commodities of like grade, quality and quantity."

There would be no limit to the size of quantity discounts or the amount of advertising allowance as long as they were made available to all buyers on an equal basis.

More Drastic Measure

The Robinson-Patman bill is more drastic. It would make it unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade or quality where that discrimination would tend to lessen competition or to promote monopoly.

The federal trade commission would establish standards and determine discounts allowable. Quantity discounts would have to be limited to the actual difference in cost of manufacture, sale and delivery of a larger amount of goods as compared with a smaller amount.

Chain store and other interests contend if this bill becomes law the result will be higher prices for consumers.

They argue that if congress is to regulate the chain store system it should be by the more flexible Borah-Van Nuys proposal.

ARKANSAS CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

OUR STATE IS OUR EXPOSITION

On June 15, 1936, Arkansas will be one hundred years old! On that day President Andrew Jackson signed the bill which officially made the territory of Arkansas the twenty-fifth of the United States. The Centennial Commission desires to know the names of all Arkansas people, whose birthdays also fall upon June 15.

Were You Born On June 15? If So, Send Us Your Name

Why not celebrate the birthday of all Arkansians who were born on June 15 at the same time we celebrate the birth of Arkansas herself?

The Hope Star is joining with other Arkansas newspapers in efforts to see that this is done; to see that special notice is given to the birth anniversary of everyone living in the state who first saw light on the same day of the month that President Andrew Jackson officially made Arkansas a state one hundred years ago.

So, if you were born on June 15, send us your name. You needn't say what year you were born unless you want to. We hope to publish between now and June 15 the names of all our readers whose birth can be celebrated jointly with the birth of our State.

The names will be forwarded to the Arkansas Centennial Commission which will publish a list by counties of the Arkansians born on Arkansas Day. Fill in the blank below:

MOISTURE CONTROL

The most important single attribute of cigarettes, other than the tobacco itself, is moisture content. To its influence we owe the ability to make uniform cigarettes, to control combustion, and to govern quality of smoke. Excessive moisture interferes with proper combustion, and makes cigarette smoke unpalatable. Insufficient moisture permits dry, dusty cigarette smoke to impinge upon the delicate mucous membrane of the smoker.

Recent chemical tests show that other popular brands have an excess of acidity over Lucky Strike of from 3% to 100%.

MEMORIAL TO EVANGELINE

UNDER the cruel tyranny of King George II of England, the French colonists who had settled in Acadia, that is now Nova Scotia, were exiled and dispersed down the entire length of the Atlantic coast and westward even to New Orleans. This tragic episode of American history is enshrined in the famous poem by Longfellow whose heroine, Evangeline, has become the symbol of Acadian persecution.

Today there is a picturesque little church in Grand Pre, Nova Scotia, that is consecrated to the memory of this heroine of Acadia, and in the small cemetery before it stands a monument to Evangeline. For a time, the church was left almost abandoned, until the government took over church and grounds and converted the area into a national park.

This shrine is pictured on the 50-cent stamp issued by Canada in 1930.

Brilliant Scene in 'Romeo and Juliet'

Norma Shearer Moves Amid Scenes of Splendor in New Picture

By ROBBIN COONS

Associated Press Correspondent
HOLLYWOOD—Until color pictures become more common, scenes like the big ball of the Capulets will continue to waste their brilliance on the black-and-white.

They are nearing the end of a week of shooting these ballroom sequences of "Romeo and Juliet" and we drop in to view the medieval whoopee. "It ought to be in color," says everyone who first surveys the glittering set.

"It couldn't be," is the quick rejoinder. "No body would believe it. Audiences would say it was too brilliant to be real."

Which is rather true than otherwise. The set represents a long ballroom with high pillars and polished patterned floor. Festive tables line one side, peopled by brightly costumed courtiers and ladies. The guests are witnessing the "pavane," opening the dancing. Over all the huge torch lights shed yellow, flickering brilliance.

A Medieval Waltz
Agnes DeMille, the dancer, is responsible for staging the "pavane." Ladies and gentlemen—and the latter in splendor of attire rival the gorgeous silks, satins, and jewels of the ladies—form a lane in the center of the ball. The music starts, a medieval waltz, deeply tiny.

From the archway at the rear come two lines of small pages, in blue jackets and red ties, each carrying aloft a large gilded or silvered bough. They form on each side, and down the lane comes Juliet, a demure Norma Shearer, her eyes cast down modestly. She bears a pink camellia, which she presents to her chosen partner, Paris. Beneath his resplendent costume of metal-decked black and spreading black velvet cape Paris is really Ralph Forbes.

Juliet Sees Romeo
But Juliet hesitates. She has caught the eye of worshipping Romeo, the Montague intruder. She looks off, scene, registers romantic interest, but is recalled to reality by Paris, who kisses her hand. Then informal comedy relief begins.

Six stalwart property men, wielding floor mops, form a line at the end of the set. A piano plays "The Blue Danube Waltz." The men, swing their mops as "partners," they polish the entire floor in something like two minutes!

Hollywood

By Paul Harrison

HOLLYWOOD.—Some impressive five- and six-figure sums are being back and forth in studio story conferences, and these are not at all in accord with the general low esteem in which authors are supposed to be held by the movie industry.

Amounts up to $250,000 have been mentioned in private conversations between the Brothers Warner and representatives of Samuel Goldwyn in regard to a comedy tangle called "Three Men on a Horse."

By "trifle" I do not mean to minimize the box office importance of the play, which is a funny enough play, but one of very slight dramatic stature.

Goldwyn has wanted the comedy for Eddie Cantor. Cantor wants it, too, because it is earmarked as a "natural" Cantor picture. But Warners own the screen rights to the phenomenal stage hit, and they won't sell. Neither will Goldwyn sell Cantor's services to Warners.

So the game is at stalemate and proves nothing except that miracles still can happen to jokes, discouraged people such as Cecil Holm, who had the idea for the play in the first place and already has been made rich by it. Before "Three Men on a Horse" reaches the screen, Mr. Holm will be considerably richer.

Play's the Thing
One of the more puzzling customs of Hollywood is the eagerness of companies to pay 10 or 20 times more for the rights to a play, which already has been seen by hundreds of thousands of people, than would be paid for an original story, almost regardless of its quality.

A recognized author may receive $15,000 for the movie rights to a published story, but let that story first get behind the footlights on Broadway, and its valuation increases several-fold in Hollywood.

Thus you find Samuel Goldwyn paying $165,000 for rights to the current hit, "Dead End." And $160,000 for "Dodsworth," which by now has toured most of the major cities as a play.

Goldwyn believes it's safer to buy a proved success than to gamble on an original yarn. And he would seem to be right. "Street Scene" bought for $125,000, made a fortune on the screen.

Into Six Figures
Largest flat sum ever paid for flicker rights is $250,000. Winchell Smith collected that for "Turn to the Right," "Broadway" and "Showboat" each brought the same amount.

Universal will collect twice on the latter investment, for "Showboat" has just been filmed again, this time in a much larger production and with sound.

"Rio Rita" was sold into celluloid for $125,000. Noel Coward collected $100,000 for "Cavalcade" and "Bitter-Sweet." But Hervey Allen received only $35,000 for the film rights to "Anthony Adverse." The book had been enormously popular, of course, but the price suffered because Anthony never had appeared on the stage.

Marc Connelly almost surely will realize a tremendous sum from the filming of "The Green Pastures," because he is being paid for the screen rights to the play, for writing the movie adaptation, and for co-directing the production. He is to receive a percentage of the receipts: Million-Dollar Laugh
In all Hollywood history, the large-est amount paid an author was on a percentage deal. Away back in 1915 Thomas Dixon offered "The Birth of a Nation" to D. W. Griffith, and asked $50,000 for it. Executives swooned and swore at his unheard-of price, finally offered a small down payment and a share of the take.

Well, "The Birth of a Nation" grossed approximately $12,000,000, out of which Mr. Dixon happily pocketed a cool million.

The last Hollywood heard of him he was retired on an estate somewhere in the Carolinas, and still laughing.

Coalition Party in America Unlikely

Two-Party System Too Deeply Rooted, Declares Byron Price

By BYRON PRICE
Chief Of Bureau, The Associated Press, Washington

Talk of establishing a "coalition government" at Washington is reviving amid many mysterious hints of backstage overtures and underground negotiation.

The subject is most intriguing. In theory, it would be a grand thing for all of the ablest men in the country to assemble, regardless of party, and put themselves shoulder to shoulder in a common endeavor to lift the nation out of the depression.

Looked at practically and in the light of experience, however, the proposal is seen to embrace many serious difficulties.

In the first place, there is no assurance that any impressive number of first-raters would be willing to coalesce. In the second place there is the question whether they could get along together for more than five minutes if they did. Finally, there is the problem whether the long-established party system could possibly be torn down to permit a real coalition.

It is an enticing thing to talk about, and it might happen, but few practical politicians appear to be taking the prospect very seriously.

Has Happened in Cabinet
Of course there would be nothing difficult or novel about adherents of both parties sitting together in the cabinet. That has happened often. Mr. Hoover had in his cabinet two men—Attorney General Mitchell and Secretary Adams—who were listed as Democrats. Mr. Roosevelt has in his cabinet two men—Secretaries Wallace and Ickes—who have been Republicans.

hardly fit the definition of "coalition government" as it is understood in those European countries where it is practiced. What happens there is that the group includes, not the discontingent element, but the constituted leadership of two or more political parties.

Such a conception would more likely begin by bringing Mr. Hoover and Roosevelt, with their principal adherents, together in one cabinet.

Unlike American Theory
No one has suggested that such a step would be either possible or desirable. It may work in some instances, in foreign countries, but the practice of party rule is deeply rooted in these United States.

Whether it is a good thing or not, the theory that the President and his official family must stand together and think as much alike as possible, is as much a part of the American method as is the party system itself.

During that brief initial period before party organizations took form, there was a real "coalition government" in this country; Thomas Jefferson sat across the cabinet table from Alexander Hamilton under the presidency of Washington.

Now even the far-removed disciples of these two seem either unable or unwilling to "go along" together in governmental effort.

After Mr. Harding was elected president he had a fleeting idea of coalition. He announced he would summon to Washington the "best minds" of the country. But all the best minds turned out to be Republican minds.

Coalition is a beautiful word, when spoken of in the future, and no attempt made to apply it specifically.

Republican Chiefs in Senate, Target

Democrats Train Big Guns on Those Up for Re-Election

By HERBERT PLUMMER
Associated Press Correspondent

WASHINGTON—Although Democratic control of the senate is a mathematical certainty regardless of what happens to either the presidency or the house in the November elections, party leaders have no intention of entering senatorial contests in the coming campaign.

Senator Guffey of Pennsylvania, charged with the responsibility of seeing that Democratic senators up for re-election this year are not only returned, but that new ones are added, has perfected his organization for a determined drive.

He expects to get under way immediately after the party's big show is over in Philadelphia in June. He has his eye on several Republican seats he would like to see filled by Democrats.

Merely increasing the numerical strength of the Democrats in the senate doesn't interest Guffey. The party already has more votes than it needs.

Critter Fire On Critics

There are several administration critics in the senate, however, whose departure in November would please Guffey and other Democratic leaders.

The Republican national convention may be some help. Both Senator Borah of Idaho and Dickinson of Iowa are up for re-election to the senate this year. Choice of either one as a presidential candidate would make Guffey's job just that much easier.

Special targets for Guffey's attack will be Hastings of Delaware and McNary of Oregon. McNary is Republican leader of the senate and Hastings is chairman of the G. O. P. senatorial campaign committee.

Because the Democrats need not worry over losing control of the senate this year they will be able to concentrate on foes like Borah, Dickinson, Hastings and McNary. There are other Republicans up for re-election, but these are the biggest guns.

Democratic Future Safe

The campaign of 1938, however, will be a different story for the Democrats. Then 27 of them in the senate must run. However, of these 27 Democratic seats, 11 are virtually not open to successful Republican attack. If the Republicans should gain all the rest, they would still lack a senate majority.

Nothing but great political upheavals in the coming campaign, followed by further upheavals against the Democrats in 1938, and again in 1940, will drive the senate Democrats out before January 3, 1941.

Not a few political prophets believe it will be 1943, seven years hence, before the Democrats can be shaken loose from their grip on the senate.

MEXICO was under great debt to Europe, when Louis Napoleon of France saw in it a means of strengthening his influence in America. And so, despite the refusal of England and Spain to back him, he sent over a French squadron. In the fall of 1862, while the United States was busy with its own Civil War, Napoleon raised the French flag over Chapultepec, then capital of Mexico.

Then came Prince Ferdinand Maximilian, Archduke of Austria, to ascend the throne of the new empire which Napoleon III had created for him. It was a tragic turn in the life of a noble dreamer. A plottist and elected him emperor, in 1864, but protests of the American Congress, and guerrilla warfare of Mexico's former president, Juarez, soon weakened his power and brought about the end of his rule in 1867.

The empress, Carlotta, rushed to France and then to Rome for aid; and, when she was rebuffed, became violently insane. Maximilian never saw her again, for she remained abroad and he was taken prisoner and shot.

The portrait of this tragic ruler appears on a single stamp that Mexico issued in 1866. It is shown here.

Today's Patterns

THE baby of the house will look adorable in the little frock (No. 8729), which is as simple to cut as a doll's dress. It is available in 6-month to 4-year sizes. Size 1 requires 1 1/2 yards of 35-inch dotted Swiss lawn, batiste, percale or silk. The big sister frock is designed so only six pieces must be sewed together, yet makes up as a stunning shirred party dress. Use printed silk or cotton fabrics. Patterns are sized 6 to 14 years, size 8 requiring 2 1/2 yards of 35-inch fabric with 1 yard of 1-inch ribbon for trimming.
